

Adopting a nexus perspective in transboundary basins helps convert challenges in water management into opportunities

In order to collectively benefit from the opportunities, transboundary agreements and institutions develop and need to adapt to changing environments

In order for these agreements and institutions to work effectively, a combination of political will, technical cooperation and an inclusive process is required.